Duffy Burns, easterner since his college days, visits the cattle town which his father owns and learns that the cattle are disappearing in a strange and unaccountable fashion. Duffy goes to the ranch as a stranger and obtains a job, to displace the cook who is to leave.

Shortly after he arrives comes Mrs. Dodd, a widow, and her six year old child. Duffy once befriended the two, and brought them to his father's house. His father sends them to his ranch, the mother to act as housekeeper.

Duffy falls in love with the superintendent's daughter. Her father plots repeatedly with the foreman to steal cattle, but finally decides to go straight. The gang try to attack him on the night set for the big raid. Duffy gets wind of the raid and obtains the sheriff.

The foreman loves the superintendent's daughter and lures her to a shack. Duffy hears about it and rides away to rescue her. The two are made prisoners. They escape and join the sheriff's posse. The rustlers are licked and after a strenuous shooting affair, surrender to the sheriff.

Mrs. Dodd steps away to leave Duffy and the superintendent's daughter alone. She realizes that they love each other and that her love for Duffy is in vain.
